Abstract

The invention concerns a device for carrying out medical interventions on the human or animal body as well as a method for generating an image of the human or animal body.

According to the invention, first image data obtained preoperatively are updated by means of second image data obtained intraoperatively, in particular, updated corresponding to the changes between two second image data recorded at different points in time.